The "Silent-No-More" Revolution

by Natalie Hudson

There is a new movement afoot in the world of pro-life advocacy that is leaving the last leg of the pro-abortion position very shaky indeed. The movement began in the United States and is called Operation Outcry: Silent No More (www.operation-outcry.org). It directly attacks the notion that abortion is a woman's right, that it is somehow a necessary choice that a woman must have in order to be liberated.

Instead, Operation Outcry: Silent No More, an organization "working to overturn Roe v. Wade in light of new evidence of the physical, emotional, and psychological damage to women who have experienced abortion and new scientific evidence regarding the undeniable humanity of the child at the time of conception," is showing abortion for what it really is - a humiliating, soul-destroying event in the life of a woman.

The old argument that abortion advocates used was the one about the unborn baby not being "really human". It is simply poor taste and blatantly unscientific to claim that an unborn baby is "just a clump of cells" especially with the advent of 3-D ultrasound technology and other imaging techniques.

With that leg gone, the other leg, the claim that "it's a woman's choice", could very well collapse under the weight of the Silent-No-More revolution.

All across North America, women are beginning to speak out about their experiences with abortion. And women who you wouldn't expect are coming forward with their stories of remorse, suffering, addiction and on-going physical and psychological issues.

Take the new national director of mobilization for Operation Outcry: Silent No More. You cannot argue with the real life experiences of Caron Strong, a former actress. "Coming to grips with the fact that I took the lives of four of my very own children could have been the end of me. I thank God Almighty for pulling me through."

The very women who claimed that a woman "has a right to choose" are now turning around and proclaiming loudly and clearly that their choice has hurt them, that it was the wrong choice and that it need not have been made. "We are women who have attempted suicides," says Caron, "lived out lies and buried our nails into our carpets trying not to waken the neighbours with our grief-stricken cries. We are women who have received forgiveness and healing in Jesus Christ. And now we are women speaking the truth that abortion 'rights' advocates do not want to hear, namely, that abortion hurts women."

The Silent No More Awareness campaign began in the United States with Georgette Forney who worked in partnership with Janet Morana of Priests for Life.

Georgette had had an abortion at the age of 16. For nineteen years she lived in denial until an experience forced her to confront the decision she had made. She later took the position as executive director of a crisis counselling organization and was amazed at the number of women who contacted her with stories of suffering from their abortions. "These experiences made me realize," she writes in her reflections, "that while abortion is wrong because our babies die, abortion is also wrong for women...To help the public understand that abortion hurts women more than it helps them, and to let women who are hurting know that help is available, I co-founded the National Silent No More Awareness Campaign in partnership with Janet Morana from Priests for Life."

Caron Strong is a former actress who has appeared on TV and in film. She's the mother of a young daughter, Cayla, her pride and joy.

Silent No More has come to Canada. Angelina Steenstra who is the founder of Second Chance Ministries, an organization that has been ministering to post-abortive women for the past fourteen years has been working directly with Georgette. In Western Canada, Denise Montenay has founded her own Canada Silent No More. Their work has been so effective that it attracted the attention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Angelina, Denise and Georgette were featured in a 20-minute CBC documentary that aired in February of 2005 and gave a remarkably fair portrayal of the work being done to reach out to sufferers of abortion in Canada.

Caron Strong believes that "long before Operation Outcry developed, many in the pro-life movement believed the real impact would be made when women who had abortions spoke out. The women of Operation Outcry are thus an answer to many prayers."

Not only are the women who have been hurt by abortion speaking out, but the fathers, grandparents and siblings who have lost a family member to abortion; they too are speaking out. These also have joined in the campaign to publicly give voice to their grief over abortion.

The message is clear. "We cannot save the baby if we do not care for the mother" says Caron Strong. We have to turn our attention to the plight of women if we want to save them and their children from abortion. As these women find healing, they will in turn be able to transform this tragic experience in their lives into an opportunity to help other women and families in a similar situation. ■

CANADIAN NATIONAL PRO-LIFE CONFERENCE
IN MONTREAL

The Right to Life Association of Toronto continues to remain active in proclaiming the message of life. We would like to share with you some of our recent and ongoing activities.

Speakers Bureau

The Association continues to reach thousands of students each year in both the Catholic and public school systems. Our speakers and volunteers made over 300 presentations during the 2004/2005 school year.

We would like to share with you some of the comments made to us about our presentations by students and teachers:

Grade 10 and 12 Students from John Paul II Secondary School

"The presentation really got to me and I won't let anyone I know get an abortion."

"I learned that abortion is wrong and it's not right to hurt innocent people.

I also learned that unborn babies are human beings and we all have freedom."

"This presentation was very helpful because I thought having an abortion was ok if your young because having a child at a young age is wrong. But now I know killing the baby is even worse."

"Nothing was boring and she proved her point well and with facts."

"I thought that the guest speaker was excellent and provided us with a new point of view. She made us aware of what is going on in our community (stem cell research and euthanasia)."

Teachers from across the Toronto Catholic and Public School Board

"The topic of abortion and related issues discussed are relevant and important for young adolescents to gain awareness. Having this presentation in all schools should be considered a high priority." -teacher at Marshall McLuhan Secondary."

"Thank you for engaging the students in an open and fair discussion on a topic of great interest." - teacher at Danforth Collegiate and Technical Institute."

"[Speaker's] presentations were superb, and clarity was exceptional" - teacher at St. Therese of Liseaux Secondary School."

"Discussions are on-going on this topic for some time (weeks, sometimes) after presentations" - teacher at St. Therese of Liseux."

"Very personable, approachable, on top of her game; good voice quality, good class control; flexible re. subject; versatile range of pro-life issues" - teacher at St. Joe's Morrow Park Catholic Secondary School."

Public Awareness Campaign

Each year volunteers take to the streets of Toronto.

Over a period of five days, we distribute 10,000 "Did You Know" cards that offer the public vital statistical information about abortion in Canada. A "Baby Bookmark" is also distributed that shows a beautiful image of a six week unborn human embryo from an ectopic pregnancy.

Volunteers hand out information on the streets of Toronto.

Conferences

The Association brought Rebecca Kiessling to the University of Toronto in May of 2005. We also arranged for her to give a forty-minute interview on CFRB's Michael Coren Show. Rebecca is one of the most powerful voices in the pro-life movement to oppose abortion in cases of rape. She is a child of rape, but more importantly she is a wife, a mother of four children (two who are adopted) and a wonderful family lawyer. Her life is a brilliant testimony to the fact that the child conceived in rape has a right to life, and that abortion is no answer to the woman suffering from trauma of rape.

Victoria Thorn

The Association sponsored a full day of training with the founder of Project Rachel, an international post-abortion healing organization. Vicki Thorn is currently the director and founder of the National Office of Post-Abortion Reconciliation and Healing (NOPARH). Those in attendance were youth and crisis pregnancy care workers, teachers, chaplains, nurses and members of the interested public. Vicki shared with us the expertise she has gained from her 25 years in the field of crisis pregnancy counselling. Her knowledge was exceptional and her delivery and interaction with the audience was engaging and inviting. The Association has a 60-page handout detailing the topics covered by Vicki Thorn that is available from our office for a small donation.

Media

The Right to Life Association appeared on many television programs and on television news networks.

Executive Director, Natalie Hudson debated Dr. Henry Morgentaler on the Discovery Health Channel's Medical Hotseat, which aired May 8th, 2005.

She also is seen on Global Television commenting on the Terry Schiavo case, and on Faith Journal speaking about InVitro Fertilization.

Last year the Association took out a full-page advertisement in the National Post. As a result of the incredible response, we took out another ad in the Toronto Sun on March 22nd, 2005. St. Catherine's Right to Life had this ad published in the St. Catherine's Standard on Saturday, June 25th, 2005.

Becoming a Member of The Right to Life Association of Toronto

Membership does have its privileges! Taking out a membership with the Association allows for greater communication between the Association and you, the public. You will receive our quarterly newsletters, have voting privileges at our Annual General Meetings and have the opportunity to participate in various committees, working directly with our Board of Directors to create and implement policies.

Your membership gives us a stronger voice in the public forum. The Right to Life Association of Toronto operates in a city of over 2.5 million people. However our membership does not reflect the population. With fewer than 1,000 members, the Association is missing out on the input of many pro-life voices in this city.

When we speak on behalf of an organization of 1,000 members we are not nearly as effective as if we were speaking on behalf of an organization of 20,000 members. It is our goal to significantly increase our membership over the next five years. To do so the Association has published this pictorial album of our activities in order to inform you of the important work that we do.

Please consider becoming a member of the Right to Life Association of Toronto, and encourage your family and friends to do the same. As a life advocacy group, we need you!

Our New Look!

You will notice that this publication of the Right to Life News looks quite different. That is because the Association has finally finished the long and arduous process of choosing a new logo. The Association was looking for a logo that would represent the triumph of life, and we believe that this new symbol does just that! The symbol clearly represents a woman who holds a child above her head as a sign of joy and victory over death. The flower on which she stands represents the hope that all members of the family have for the future; fathers, siblings, and grandparents alike. The image is positive and life affirming.

The choice of our logo came about through a committee that worked with a graphic designer, Lynn Harvey. She developed several ideas and the committee chose three that were then subjected to the scrutiny of the public by way of an informal poll. Organizations and individuals, teachers and students alike were allowed to view the selected logos, and the decision was almost unanimous. Most people chose the new logo and recognized it as a symbol that represents hope and the triumph of life. Special thanks goes to our graphic designer, Lynn Harvey, for her patience and skill, and to those who participated in our poll.

The Association has also designed a new membership brochure, which will be printed and ready for distribution in the Fall of 2005.

Art & Essay Competition

The Right to Life Association held its first annual Art & Essay Competition this year. Secondary school students from Grades 9 through 12 were asked to participate by either using their artistic abilities to depict a pro-life ethic in art or to write a 1,000-word essay on either the topic of abortion or euthanasia. Some of the suggested topics were Does a person have a "Right to Die"? What is meant by human rights, and what effect does using "Right to Die" language have on society's understanding of Euthanasia and Physician Assisted Suicide?

Some people believe that abortion occurring in the first three months of pregnancy is 'not so bad' because the size of the fetus is extremely small. Should the size of the pre-born child be a reason for deciding whether or not abortion is acceptable?

The schools that participated were St. Joseph's Morrow Park, Archbishop Romero, Bishop Morocco/ Thomas Merton, Loretto Abbey, Bishop Allen Academy, and Cardinal McGuigan. We received 25 art submissions from Archbishop Romero Catholic Secondary School alone!

Winners for the Art and Essay Contest received cash awards and a certificate from the Association.

Winners of the First Annual Art and Essay Competition are as follows:

Art Competition Winners:

Martha Gomes, Grade 12 student from Bishop Morocco Thomas Merton Catholic Secondary School tied for 1st place with Terryl Knox Magbanua from Archbishop Romero Catholic Secondary School. Ms. Gomes was presented with her award at her graduation ceremony on June 28th, 2005.

Honorable Mentions were given for the work submitted by Elrica M. Au, a Grade 10 student from Loretto Abbey Catholic Secondary School, and Jeffrey Plaza a Gr. 10 student from Archbishop Romero.

Essay Competition Winners

Hilary Marchildon from Bishop Allen Academy tied for 2nd place with Aarti Rattan from St. Joseph's Morrow Park. Ms. Marchildon received her award at her Graduation Mass.

What Really Happened at the University of Western Ontario

By Tony Gosgnach
The Interim

The University of Western Ontario resembled more an armed camp under siege than a place of higher learning when Henry Morgentaler's honorary degree road show rolled into London, Ont. June 16.

At least five dozen police officers ringed the area around the university's Alumni Hall as Morgentaler received the honorary doctor of laws degree before almost 2,000 graduates and their relatives. Outside, police and security officials erected metal barricades along the laneway about 50 metres from the hall doors to keep out about 600 protesters who gathered there, as well as along the heavily travelled Western Road. Morgentaler was evidently escorted in and out a back door to avoid confronting the protesters.

The day capped months of rancour and maneuvering both within and outside the university community, as plans were unveiled to bestow the recognition on Canada's most notorious abortionist. More than 12,000 people, including many students and alumni, had signed an internet petition against the award and some estimates have placed the loss to the university treasury, through lost donations and bequests, in the tens of millions of dollars.

The university's administration remained intransigent to the end, however, and even greeted Morgentaler with glowing words as he stepped forward to accept the degree.

Vice-president Greg Moran, while curiously reminding those in the audience that debate is "a key element in a liberal education" and "important to the formation of a strong society," claimed: "If we are to sustain and evolve a humane, caring and tolerant society within such diversity, we will rely on open, courageous, respectful and civil debate. We could ask for no better example of the practice and success of such methods."

Morgentaler, as has been his custom in public speeches, referred again to his and his family's experiences in Nazi concentration camps and trotted out his well-worn claim that the abortion of unwanted children has lowered the crime rate and led to a caring and safer society. In an earlier interview in the Globe and Mail newspaper, he told reporter Caroline Alphonso: "I do believe, even if it may not sound modest, that I deserve this degree." The hundreds outside Alumni Hall took issue with that boast.

At least four UWO professors joined the protesters, while wearing their full academic regalia. Professor David Stanford, of the Department of Statistical & Actuarial Sciences, bemoaned "the current of political correctness" that is pervasive at Western and said it was "extremely sad" that his university would choose to honour an individual such as Morgentaler.

Philosophy Professor Thomas M. Lennon, who has worked on campus for 37 years and received numerous awards of his own in that time, said he "couldn't fathom the intentions of the university" and characterized the Morgentaler honour as "a silly political event."

Sociology Professor Paul Whitehead predicted that because of the backlash, he didn't think the university "will make a stupid decision like that again." He added he felt badly for the students and parents who didn't want to be present for the controversial event.

Philosophy Professor Dennis Hudecki (nephew of the great pro-life senator Dr. Stan Hudecki) was also present in full regalia.

Sister Mary Frances Dorschell, a French instructor at the affiliated Brescia College, said students at her school were free to be excused from classes to attend the protest.

A new pro-life group, London-based Truth and Love for Life, caused a sensation when about a dozen of its young members showed up garbed in funeral black and carrying a wooden casket topped by a tiny pair of shoes and a banner proclaiming that more than two million unborn Canadians have been killed by legalized abortion. Media cameras swarmed the group for images.

The main organizer of the overall protest, London resident Nikki Cooke, said she was "very pleased" with the turnout on a weekday that began with steady rain and very cool temperatures. She also expressed pleasure with the large numbers of young people who turned out. She lamented that the many media personnel present - from outlets including CTV, CBC and the Globe and Mail - bypassed her, as the official media spokesperson, in favour of interviewing the stereotypical older male or religious person.

"We're just happy we're able to get the word out, that life begins at conception," she said. "If we can change even one person's life, we've done our job." ■

Umbilical Cord - Blood Transplants Save Lives of Babies with Rare Genetic Disorder

CHAPEL HILL, May 24, 2005 (LifeSiteNews.com) - Umbilical cord-blood transplants save the lives of newborns with a rare genetic disorder called Krabbe's disease and help their brains develop more normally, a study led by researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Duke University Medical Center concludes.

"Infants with Krabbe's disease lack an enzyme necessary for normal myelination of the brain and peripheral nervous system at the time when myelination is occurring most rapidly," said Dr. Maria Luisa Escolar, the study's lead author. "The infants become irritable, lose all their developmental skills, become deaf and blind, have seizures and die. It is very painful for parents to watch their children deteriorate this rapidly. This study shows that finally there's a treatment that offers hope."

Results of the study were published in the May 19 issue of the New England Journal of Medicine. The study's senior author is Dr. Joanne Kurtzberg, director of Duke's Pediatric Blood and Marrow Transplant Program.

The study demonstrates that umbilical cord-blood transplant is a life-saving treatment for newborns with infantile Krabbe's disease. In addition, Kurtzberg added, the study adds to a growing body of evidence that cord blood can save children with other "lysosomal storage diseases." These include more than 45 diseases, such as Krabbe's disease, Hurler syndrome, adrenoleukodystrophy, metachromatic leukodystrophy, Tay-Sachs disease, Sandhoff disease and a host of others.

All of the infants in the study who received cord-blood transplants as newborns are still alive. Moreover, most newborns who were treated before the onset of symptoms showed continual improvement in developmental skills and had age-appropriate mental and language skills. ■

Bank of Montreal Caves to Media Pressure and Cancels 15 Year Old MasterCard Affinity Program With Pro-Life Group

TORONTO, April 12, 2005 (LifeSiteNews.com) - The Bank of Montreal has officially declared that it will cease to support a pro-life affinity MasterCard when the agreement expires on July 2006 because of a "small number" of complaints.

The BMO President and CEO of the Personal and Commercial Client Group, Robert W. Pearce, replied to a Globe and Mail article entitled "When affinity is really an affront" (April 2). The letter to the editor, entitled "end of an association" and dated Saturday, April 9, 2005 stated that "As a commercial enterprise, Bank of Montreal does not want to be involved in a controversy over what so many consider to be personal and private decisions. Unfortunately, providing a strictly commercial affinity card to LifeCanada (a card we have provided for the past 15 years) has created the false perception recently that we may, in some manner, endorse a particular point of view. From the outset, that has never been our intention. We always have remained neutral on this issue."

The letter then indicated that "Following a review of our affinity-card policy, we have decided to end this particular commercial relationship at the conclusion of our contractual agreement."

While the reaction of BMO seems to indicate reaction to a significant complaint a Canadian Press article dated April 9 quoted BMO spokesman Ralph Marranca as saying a "small number" of complaints were received.

"It seemed like a lot of them were form letters," Marranca said. "They all seemed to be saying the same thing in the same words. "I don't have a specific number. My understanding is that it was not a large number."

LifeCanada President Joanne Byfield expressed regret regarding the Bank of Montreal's decision. "This campaign to smear the organization was successfully orchestrated by radical abortion activists and carried out by supporters in the Canadian media," she said.

Byfield speculates that the connection between BMO's affinity Mosaik MasterCard and LifeCanada was discovered by pro-abortion advocates and a campaign to influence BMO was orchestrated. The affinity card, which is associated with 160 different organizations, is a fundraising enterprise. For every $100 spent by the holder of a group's affinity MasterCard, BMO in turn gives $0.25 to the organization. Byfield said a handful of people, including a midwife from Victoria, circulated information about the program to an email list that included sympathetic journalists who decided to jump on the bandwagon and create a news story which then influenced BMO executives.

Byfield questioned why the credit card program was even considered a news story when the program has operated for over a decade. "Why suddenly was this a news story?" she asked.

The media bias complaint is also taken up by the website "cbcwatch.com", which in a commentary surrounding the media presentation of the story stated: "This depiction could not be more misrepresented. It is a perfectly legal credit card affinity program. The real disparity exists in how financially, like the CBC, all Canadian taxpayers are forced to fund both abortions and abortion activism. CBC purposefully neglects to report that fact. It also omits the fact that private abortion clinics are welcomed, but most other privately provided medical services remain forbidden. These sorts of inconsistent, seemingly discriminatory policies suit the cause so are never mentioned." ■
